NEW YORK GIANTS COP WORLD TITLE

Deciding Game of Series Won by Margin of One Run. Contest Ended in Blaze of Glory.

New York, Oct. 13.—World champions, 1921—the New York National League Baseball club.

The Giants won the title, which will be theirs for the next year, by defeating the Yankees in the eighth game of the world series at the Polo grounds today. The American league champions died fighting hard in a classic twirling duel between their pitching act, Waite Hoyt, and Art Nehf, the Giants' star left hander. However, they lacked the necessary punch to win, the National league team taking the game by the score of 1 to 0 and the series, five games to three.

The Giants' victory gives Manager John J. McGraw his second world's championship team. The New York Nationals, seven times pennant winners under McGraw's management, captured the world's series against the Athletics of the American league in 1905, but, although winning the bunting five times since they have been baffled every time until this year in their quest for world honors, twice bowing to the Athletics, once to the Red Sox and once to the White Sox in other combats. This year with a National league entrant that has shown its high class by coming from behind late in the penant race and beating the Pittsburgh Pirates to the flag, the world's series told a different story. Off to a poor start through their loss of the first two games of the series, the Giants gamely came back, speedily evened up the series and then, with but a slight let up while getting their second wind, rounded into the stretch with a rush and pushed through with three straight victories to their final triumph. In every victory, except today's, they came from behind to win. Thus one of the best and most hotly contested series in the history of the sport was won clearly, and, in the final analysis, decisively, by a club whose gameness and all around ability of the highest grade will be generously conceded.

As for the underlying reason for the success of the McGraw men the experts may differ, but there seems little cause to doubt that the most widely propounded opinion will be that it was because of a preponderance of high class pitching ability. The series showed but two of Manager Higgins' twirlers capable of pitching winning ball—Mays and Hoyt—while the Giants put forward a trio of master workmen in Douglas, Barnes and Nehf.

Outbit by the Giants in nearly every game and by many points in the series as a whole, the Yankees none the less made a hard fight of it by their smartness in manufacturing runs out of scant material and the superb work done by Mays and Hoyt in six of the eight battles. Their championship craft went down with flag flying and tonight their loyal supporters were tendering condolences over the loss of the series with congratulations upon the showing the Yankee players had made in the first world series a New York American league has ever earned the right to compete. As for the final and decisive game of the series, the winning of it was due to the superb pitching of Nehf against a moundsman to whom he had twice lost the decision earlier in the series. Allowing the American league batsmen but four hits, none of them better than singles and three of them coming with two men out, the crafty southpaw again and again turned the Yankees back in order or baffled their determined efforts to put across the solitary run for which they were struggling all through the contest.

Hardly a whit less creditable was the performance of Hoyt, the Yankee youngster. Hoyt was in trouble in several innings, but except in the fatal first when the Giants scored their only tally on two passes and an error, he worked himself out brilliantly, once with the running catch by Fewster to help along. Toward the end he was going stronger than ever, retiring the Giants in order in the eighth and ninth.

The game, won by the Giants in the first inning, was probably saved for them in the ninth by as brilliant a fielding performance as has been seen on the diamond in many a day. One Yankee had been retired in the final frame. This one was "Babe" Ruth, again in uniform, but confining his activities heretofore in the game to the coaching lines. The Yankee fans, who had been for eight innings watching that one lonely tally of the Giants loom larger and larger, picked up hope and cheered wildly as the "Bambino" stepped to the plate to bat for Wally Pipp. The home run king made a valiant try but his injured arm had taken the power from his swing, and the best he could do with Nehf's puzzling delivery was to ground weakly to Kelly. Aaron Ward was more fortunate. He waited out Nehf, who had been somewhat wild for several innings, and finally walked.

Frank Baker, again in the line up in place of the injured McNally, came next. With the count 3 to 2 he met one of Nehf's offerings squarely. It shot towards right field, skimming the ground far to the left of John Rawlings. The rap looked like a sure hit and with Ward legging it for third it promised to put the Yankees in a favorable scoring position if it got by. But it did not pass. Throwing himself at the skimming sphere Rawlings, amid amazed gasps from the crowd, reached out and clung to it with his left hand. Rolling over and transferring the ball to his right hand Rawlings made the throw to Kelly at first while still on the ground, getting Baker by several feet. It was then Kelly's turn, and with a lightning like and accurate throw he shot the ball across the diamond into the hands of Third Baseman Frank Frisch. A cloud of dust flew up over third as Ward slid into the bag. From the midst of it Umpire Quigley's form emerged, his right arm flung forth motioning the runner out. The double play had been completed, the third Yankee of the inning had been retired, the game was over and the Giants had won it and the world's championship.
